Christmas Shows
To be announced later

Well, another gallery I was in, closed. The recession has finally hit Colorado, and several galleries are closing their doors. It is a bit scary, but at the same time, I think how this is causing me to look around for some different doors. As much as I try to start new things, I find myself falling back into the standard way of doing things; getting into galleries and doing shows. I'm fed up with myself regarding that attitude.

As banks are not loaning money to people that have great credit to buy homes, I am seeing people get creative and do lease-purchase agreements. The galleries that are staying open work very hard to create an interactive atmosphere with their clientele. They aren't just galleries anymore, which I find to be very exciting. I am writing a book about my art, which I hope to have available in six months, and I am hoping to announce an artist retreat in Anasazi Country next summer. It all could be very interesting and uncharted territory for me. I am excited.

In the meantime, I am going to sell my prints from the gallery at $26 including shipping for two weeks ending on 9/17/10. After that, they will remain $26, but the price will not include shipping. There is nothing wrong with the prints, but the plastic covers are scuffed up and they have the gallery labels on them. I don't want to throw away all of that plastic, so I have decided to do this sale. They would make great Christmas presents. Take a look. Go to my webpage at reenchantearth.com and click on "Sale" I have several prints listed. If you have questions, please e-mail me.

Shows

The end of the season for me has come. It has been a great, yet challenging year. The thing I love the most about doing shows is all of the people that I get to meet. Each and everyone enriches my life and my paintings. I love the stories that they share with me, their history, and the connections that we make. Shows are exhausting to do, but the people make it all worthwhile. I want to thank each and everyone of you for all of your encouragement, support and beauty. I hope life is good for you wherever you might be. Wopila!
